Introduction: In this essay, I would like to discuss two concepts that I believe are important in listening, and I would like to illustrate them based on my own cognitive competence. When I first listened to a speech in a foreign language, I heard strange and completely unfamiliar sounds. I mean, at first, I thought it was difficult to understand and comprehend. But after some time, by slowly listening, I gradually began to distinguish and even understand the sounds. I believe that the most important reason for this is that I have made it a habit to listen intensively against my will.

As a result, I was completely convinced that both forms of listening focus on the formation of a specific ability of a person. That being said, I will try to explain some of the important 4 personally useful aspects of the first intensive listening. So, the first point is that intensive listening focuses on common core skills. That is, what I want to say should be presented or heard in sequence, or in an orderly manner according to a plan.

The second aspect is that listening in this style is a phenomenon related to a person's quick listening activity. That is, even if they last a few minutes. It definitely requires more focused and rigorous practice.

Thirdly, in listening to this form, they have chosen for me to focus on the form, as many masters have explained. That is, during intensive listening practice, it is necessary to pay attention to grammar and vocabulary during pronunciation, rather than to general meaning. I can't even say that I experienced such a situation when I took the IELTS test. In the exam, there was such an example, instead of the sentence "I like to listen to music", saying "I like music" seems like a simple sentence, but mishearing an important question leads to a mistake. That is why it is necessary to listen carefully and prudently.

The fourth aspect is also important by focusing on individual dials. For example, telling a phone number or IELTS is not a joke if I say that many examples are based on intensive listening. In other words, pronouncing people's names or saying other directions requires a lot of skill from a person. Hop is definitely a general concept I know.

This opposite or conflicting form of listening is what I consider the hallmark of Broad Listening. In this style of listening, I believe that extended listening is a method that I teach in real-world situations, for example, to improve my listening skills. Broad listening, in my view, encourages a person to hear about open, non-confined situations and can focus on longer activities. Another aspect of this is that it is possible to listen to video, audio or radio broadcasts that can be listened to from several minutes to several hours. In extensive listening, one does not need to translate every word or pay attention to grammar rules. Instead, the listener is left to simply try to understand the audio as a whole. On the other hand, since extensive listening focuses on general understanding of the individual, extensive listening helps students understand spoken language in real-world contexts.

For example, I always like to hear the original audio in a foreign language in different ways. Reasonably, in extensive listening, I listen to the diversity of world messages and try to understand the logic of the story in a foreign language.

In conclusion, both types of listening play a significant role in improving a person's listening skills. They even complement each other during a person's life.

Explain and provide examples of skimming and scanning

In this essay, I would like to mention about two types of reading in generally. Actually, reading skill is one of the tricks and in my mind it's little bite draw much time from person. Therefore, for doing these types of reading I think that we should to know how to read by skimming and scanning are two types of reading strategies that employ fast eye movement and keywords to move swiftly through material for somewhat different reasons.

This teaching method is very different from one another. Based on the knowledge I have acquired and read, I can say that Skimming is a type of reading focused on quickly reading the text, that is, on getting a general idea of the meaning. I think this could be read to find specific information, as opposed to a scan, e.g. numbers or names.

For example, when I come across an interesting article, I first focus on the main factors and numbers. That is, without spending a lot of time, I will go over the key questions that are important.

Skimming is a type of reading that is common in reading newspapers, newsletters, and e-mails. I think the following tips should be followed for this type of reading i.e., Scanning, first of all I think it is best to know what a person is looking for, because if there is no specific thing that a person is looking for, then he hesitates. The second important factor is learning by analyzing information about several keywords or phrases and search terms. The third factor is searching by finding only one keyword at a time.

The fourth factor is that if you find the word or phrase you need, your eyes will have to quickly scan the page again and again until you find the word or phrase you want. The fifth factor is that if your eyes fall on one of the keywords, you need to carefully read the surrounding material. Because, in the paragraph you found, the important or perhaps the most important information, the main solution may be around it. That's why it's important. There are generally three types of Skimming: it consists of previews, overviews, and previews. Let's to look at each of them by bringing examples. So, if talk about previews so in this type mostly I note headline for example: "The west end phenomenon".

This is the importance of my perspective skimming. Skimming is used to quickly identify the main points and ideas in the text. For example, "the adventures of Tom Sour". But scanning helps to find this particular fact. Scanning is the quick reading of a text to find specific information for example, I take from one public journal, "Madam butterfly: Thursday 7.30pm" here is important information which draw my attention. which often includes types of reading such as skimming and intensive reading.

In conclusion is that this type of reading definitely helps a person to read actively, and for me personally, I need to know and use various mantras, proverbs or even the necessary information in order to learn and clearly understand. If I determine after skimming that the content will be beneficial, go ahead and scan.

Explain the typical stages of reading development

In this essay, I would like to explain the typical reading stages according to my humble understanding. Ever since God created me as a person or individual in this world, that is, since I know my memory, I have been flowing. I mean, there is a saying in the people of the East that "know from the cradle to the grave". In doing so, I never stopped learning or thinking even for a minute. Hop it was common.

Let me go through the typical stages of reading development one by one. In my opinion, the first stage I called introductory of reading. I think that for this stage teachers gives students about how to start to dive into the reading and the represent the rules of content, according to the standard should be. It is a usual stage of education is called "Teaching reading correctly with syllables and words, not letters" for a child that starts from the nursery. I believe that the reason is that the first movements are organized in the kindergarten, colors, counting, as well as the first even methodical elements that are necessary for the other beginners are shown to the child, is also taught on the part of the pupils, of course.

The second reading I called reading with intensive and loudly like story reading lessons. Which is important for the school, where in the first months any child is taught by experienced teachers to learn to read meaningfully. I can clearly say that when a child comes to kindergarten, the knowledge has acquired in kindergarten should be continued here. And at some point, parents also try not to neglect the child, because the child is in need, the tasks assigned to the school may seem complicated, in such cases, it is necessary to come to the objective decisions and help.

The third reading stage is reading fairy tales which is that if you allow children to share their knowledge and experiences in the classroom while teaching them to read, they can learn to read as easily as they learn to speak at home.

The fourth stage of reading is learning poetry reading. My strong point of view is that children should be helped to develop the habit of reading by and the desire to enjoy reading, so that they can become independent. In general, they receive knowledge in two different ways: oral and written. I can clearly emphasize that often regular reading helps to supplement new knowledge with existing knowledge. In conclusion, the school also prepares and get ready for another type of stage. After that, he will continue to study in lyceums or colleges in many international countries. At this stage, students are divided into two stages in the development of reading: reading for learning, and the second is choosing to read using such types as

The fifth stage is read popular articles. In this process, students are required to work more independently. It is important to note that, regardless of what the typical stage is, students who do not know well are divided into students who learn at the average, good and excellent level from the point of view of competence. For example; average, well-educated students usually try to keep the same study all the time. excellent students can also be called progressive students. Also, they are constantly evolving, even if the end of the grade is no longer important. They start working on some serious projects, and the next typical stage of students of this type is to go to universities to do scientific work and try to make inventions.

In conclusion, it can be said that each stage of the typical stages of reading development has its own place in the formation of individual students as individuals in the intellectual society, and I can provide a lot of information about this. Taking this into account, I always teach the slogan "Life is important" to my students in my school and as a teacher. In the era we live in, we must seriously and constantly acquire new knowledge, and these typical reading educational stages are a great opportunity, and I would advise young people to use them correctly and effectively in the future. Because I can say that youth is a gift of God that is given to each person once in a while. It is up to each individual to make the most of it.

Evaluate reading activities and materials

In this essay, I will discuss specific tools and resources for research. I want to talk about teaching reading activities. I think that the methodology used by the teacher in the course of the lesson, how to use that methodology and how effective it will be in evaluating the learning activities and materials. Therefore, to make this essay clearer, I think the stage of learning activities such as Motives - Objectives - Learning Activities - Self-Control - Self-Evaluation is important.

First of all, the assessment of learning activities and materials depends on many important factors. For example: there is a traditional method of teaching using works of art. Secondly, it is possible to take the form of teaching through an interactive method using scientific and popular literature.

Secondly, in my opinion, to be a motivation for the person for the teaching activity, and then the goal, then handout exercises for teaching and applying them during the lesson. What is important is the evaluation of the good behavior achieved.

Thirdly, it is important to eliminate misunderstandings during the activity, that is, with the materials. The first criterion for evaluating the materials is that it is in an understandable language, and secondly, it should be creative, productive, and include exercises such as speaking, listening, reading, and writing, integration of new knowledge, handout can be an effective in teaching tool, it helps learners reflect on the new information. Handouts are widely used as instructional tools. In my point of view, it's revision before examination. The basis of these handouts should be educational and spiritual, and even life should be focused on finding solutions to problems.

The conclusion is that I think creative activity is important to achieve a specific goal and to engage readers in a wide variety of ways. The most important thing is not to make the child passive and not to tire him. The activities given should be focused on their lively activities.

Evaluate skimming and scanning techniques

In this essay, I have provided information on the evaluation of these skimming and scanning methods. The advantages of skimming is one of the tools you can use to get more action and results in less time. Skimming basically means looking for general or specific ideas. My view is that this is often the best way to work with fictional or factual material.

It helps me identify what is important to my home's purpose. During this type of reading, one has the opportunity to search for additional details for one's study. Some people think that skimming is a random process. However, I believe it is different.

However, you need to be organized to review effectively. In particular, he may not be able to read everything. Whether it's an article or information, I always read the first paragraphs carefully to get a good idea of what information is going to be discussed, and then I jot down the important parts in a notebook. Sometimes topic, they give you the main idea of the paragraph. Another important technique is to memorize information by looking for and memorizing important information such as names, dates, or events that are really important.

Conclusion: Often a person has such a psychology that the last few paragraphs try to remember by reading the information that contains the conclusion or conclusion. If complex feelings arise from this memorization, even if it is a necessity or a mint, one should read it in detail, as a result, one should read it to get the main ideas.

Another factor is that if you want to look at the necessary information later, you can save it to the desktop. This method is good today, but the other side of the problem is that the virus should not get into it, otherwise it will be deleted.

There is also a Hop Scan reading mode, which is another useful tool for speed reading. This is in contrast to Skimming, where in Scanning we only look for a specific fact or piece of information without reading the whole thing. For example, when you scan a friend's phone number in a phone book or sports scores in a newspaper, or your favorite TV show, successful scanning depends on how your material is structured and understood. Also, the advantage of scan allows you to quickly find details and other information. In general, the material you scan is usually organized in the following ways: alphabetically, chronologically, non-alphabetically, by category or by text, so that information can be found clearly and transparently. Important information may not be in alphabetical order. It is better if it is mostly encyclopedic.

In conclusion, the technique of reading is a process of special attention, and how to think about it is up to the student.
